While it is elusive, chi is everywhere in the world and is considered one's aesthetic periphery. Feng Shui reveals itself in our outlook regarding landscape and about life. It is the framework we place either consciously or unconsciously around our lives.

In Oriental culture, the positioning of lots of things like for instance buildings, graves and furniture is based on the patterns established by the flow of yin and yang and chi. Together, these generate both negative and positive effects. Feng Shui is made up of five elements. These elements are water, metal, fire, earth and wood. They blend in their own certain ways to generate either destructive or positive cycles. In order for optimum Feng Shui to be acquired in whatever room, all of the five elements will be included without being overpowered by any one of them separately.

Like for instance, if metal elements like contemporary furniture pieces dominate an area, the effect could be balanced by introducing wood elements to the room like for instance green plants. Candles could also be incorporated to form the fire component. If implementing Feng Shui as a design feature in anybody's house, it is important to make use of natural substances when possible. The double aspects of yin and yang always reign supreme in Feng Shui in view of the fact that the ultimate purpose is to be able to produce a harmonious balance between human beings and natural objects.

The bedroom is considered amongst the more important rooms in any house. The bedroom is essential to the flow of energy throughout the house. Beds themselves are said to have power places also. Various ancient Asian philosophy states that the energy from somebody who ever slept in a bed leaves a residue. For optimum Feng Shui, how the bed is positioned in relation to the bedroom door needs to be considered. The door must always be seen from the bed. If the door is not seen from the bed, anybody could use a mirror in such a way that it would reflect the door. This will restore Feng Shui.

Feng Shui connects life and landscape together and all things in life depend on each other. The Oriental way of thinking believes the landscape is a breathing and living entity. There are a lot of aspects concerning humanity and heaven and earth that the Western world can think about as those in the east do. Just as Shakespeare said in Hamlet, "There are more things in heaven and earth, my dear Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."
